

A narrative history podcast uncovering the stories of the Third Maine Infantry Regiment.

From left to right: Capt. William Watson of Bath; Lt. Woodbury Hall of Woolwich; and Private Granville Holt of Norway.

Preserving the stories of Maine's Civil War soldiers — one person at a time.

Introduction

A NEW MAINE HISTORY RESOURCE FOR YOUR MEMBERS

Dear History Friends,

Your organization works tirelessly to preserve the stories, documents and genealogy of Maine’s communities. I’m writing to share a new free resource you may find valuable.

Company D is a narrative history podcast that uncovers the stories of the soldiers of the Third Maine Infantry Regiment, a company composed of volunteers and conscripts from Sagadahoc, Kennebec, Lincoln, Cumberland, Knox, York and Androscoggin counties.

Each episode features an in-depth, historically accurate portrait of one soldier who served in Company D. Using diaries, letters, pension files, census data, military records, newspapers, and town histories, the podcast brings forgotten stories to life — raw, riveting, and real.

Our mission is threefold:

1. To uncover these nearly forgotten stories.
2. To share them with a wide audience through modern storytelling.
3. To preserve them for future generations.

We’d be honored if you would share this resource with your members, volunteers and patrons who are interested in Maine and Civil War history. Sincerely,

George F. Snell III

Host & Executive Producer

*“The stories you never heard.
The soldiers you never knew.”*

Featured Episodes

Ep01: The Mystery of the Missing Captain

He was listed as missing. Then declared killed. Then reported wounded and captured. For more than 160 years, the final fate of Captain Alfred S. Merrill has remained a mystery. In the debut episode of Company D, we uncover the truth in “The Mystery of the Missing Captain.”

Ep03: Albion Kennerson’s Confederate Brother

James Kennerson leaves Maine for Alabama—and within months is forced into marriage and then enlists with the Confederacy, fighting against his two brothers in Union blue. Brother against brother isn’t a slogan here; it’s the Kennersons’ life, and the Civil War runs straight through their front door.

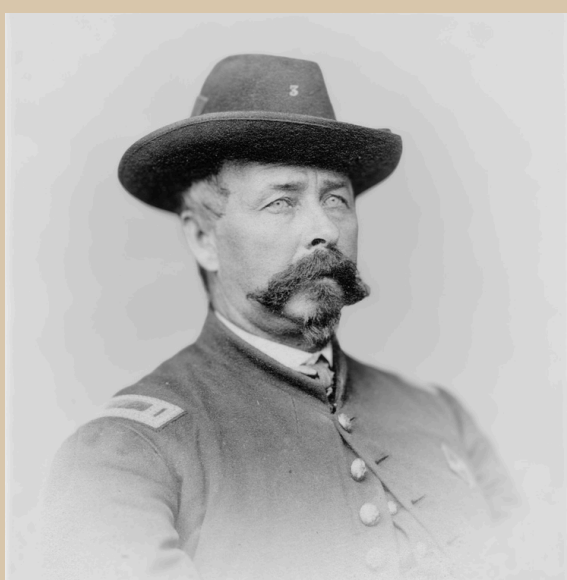

WHY THIS PROJECT MATTERS

Company D brings Maine's Civil War history to life one soldier at a time. It is especially valuable for:

- Local history enthusiasts
- Genealogy researchers
- Schools and educators
- Civil War study groups
- Community members interested in the human side of the war

Our mission is to preserve and share Maine's stories — one regiment, one company, one soldier at a time.

From left to right: Lt. William H. Higgins of Woolwich; Nurse Sarah Sampson of Bath, and James H. Tallman of Bath.

HELP US PRESERVE MAINE'S CIVIL WAR HISTORY

If this aligns with your mission, we'd be honored if you would consider:

- Sharing the podcast with your members
- Featuring it in your newsletter or bulletin
- Posting a link on your website or Facebook page
- Hosting a print copy or resource in your local history collection

We have created a dedicated resource page designed specifically for Maine libraries and historical societies. You can access it here:

LIBRARY AND HISTORICAL SOCIETY RESOURCE PAGE

 Listen on Spotify  Listen on Apple Podcasts  Visit our Website

Thank you for the work you do to preserve Maine's history.

If your members or the general public would like information on the soldiers from your specific town, we'd be happy to help. You can reach me, George F. Snell III, host and executive producer of Company D, at:

Contact: companydpodcast (AT) gmail (DOT) com

If your readers enjoy Maine and Civil War history or if your organization hosts lectures, genealogy programs, or local history events, we'd be delighted to share additional resources.

Company D aims to build these histories together. Thank you to the many of you who have already helped Company D in the past with our research. We very much appreciate it.

